CANADIAN WRECK RECALLS MISTAKE OF OPERATOR McCABE.

Incident of Train Dispatching That Illustrates Some of the Responsibilities That Rest Upon the Man Who Manipulates the Key in the Lonely Little Telegraph Office.

The Grand Trunk wreck, for which the operator, Carson, is held to be reprehensible, brings to light many stories of railroad life from the technical viewpoint, some of which excite much sympathy for the operator, whose life, while at times exceedingly dull and uninteresting, situated as he often is at some small, out-of-the-may place, with little else than the monaling of the wind on the wires to keep him awake, is, on the other hand, so fraught with responsibility and need of a good, Clear head that the wonder is that more trecks do not occur.

An experienced railroad operator, in peaking of Carson yesterday, said that his dympath'es were with the operator and that he would wager, could the real facts be brought out, that Carson's story is before on, the B. & O." said the nurrator. "I was working in a train dispatcher's office on, the B. & O." said the rairrator. "Away back in the seventies, and as the road is it then existed was a single track with tunnels and bridges every few miles, the task of keeping trains roowing was a difficult one. Engines in those days were not perfected as they are to-day, and they would often go wrong in spite of every effort by those in charge; they would steam badly, get 'cranky,' and what not, causing the train to fall behind time, and then orders must be given for special meeting points. Moreover, if a passenger train happened to be beavily loaded the grades in that part of the country often made the schedule time an impossibility when tie track was had.

schedule time an impossibility when the track was bad.

BELATED PASSENGER WAS RUNNING BEHIND THE RETULAR SCHEDULE.

"It was a passenger train of this character that fell behind schedule time on the night I have in mind. She was running as No. 7 and contained eight cars, all filled with passengers, a great many of whom were Congressmen and others on their way to Washington for the reassembling of Congress after the holidays in the winter of 75.

"At the same time passenger train No. 10 was running on orders and bound for the eastbound train, was twenty minutes late, and, as abe had no right of tway, it meant that No. 10 would not walt at the meeting point after a given time. To obviate dejay, the dispatcher decided to advance No. 10 to a siding ten or a dozen miles west, where she could meet and pass No. 7.

"Call Sh." Said the dispatcher to me as he heard No. 7 blow for Central, which was our office, 'and tell him to put out red light for No. 19.

"Red light meant 'hold for orders,' and the light was at the top of a twenty-five foot pole, inclosed in a small box with glass doors on each side. Insude the glass doors were two red curtains or sildes, controlled by a cord leading to the operator's table in side the office. These sildes were kept up all the time, showing a white light, except when the curtain was dropped, which made the light red.

"As No. 7 was at that moment standing in front of our office, under our own red light, which had been dropped in her face, meaning that she noust get orders from up. 12.

"Each of these gentlems will have support, and I am not proved now to say which would make the most acceptable candidate for the Democrat." It think I can see a bring in Mr. Bryan toward Mr. Olney. The is no question that Mr. Olney is the boomed in the West. He will make formidable candidate. While not pennally a magnetic man, he has a cless political record and undoubted ability. He supported Mr. Bryan, as did Mr. orman, and they are equal there. It me be that some of the lingering animosit to Mr. Cleveland will react upon that scieman's former Secretary of State, but the can't tell. "Many Democrate have become reconciled with Mr. Cleveland, and yet, in some quarters, is that deal' of bitterness toward himls feit whether Mr. Olney would share it is a question of the modification of the plain that all Democratic beholders. Republican high protectionists will not give it to them.

"You will never have tariff reform to suit the people," said Mr. Richardson, with emphasis, "so long as the manufacturer virturally sits in committee and writes the schedule. The way the protectionists usually reform the tariff is to stick on a few points more of duty. Then, when there is a clamor for a change they say: 'Oh, leave the revision of the tariff in the hands of its friends.'

"Some of the Republicans who are more."

"Some of the Republicans, who are more far-sighted than their associates, realize the drift of the seatiment, and they are trying to save their party by granting a modicum of revision. They cannot get even that much. The high protections:s are intrenched and they cannot be persuaded to come out by pleadings of their colleagues. They will have to be routed out by the Democrats.

"The country is patient and has been in-cilined to give the Republicans a show: to let the tariff be ravised by its friends, but the country cannot be fooled forever. I think the people are awakening to the real zation that the Triends of the protective raviff will ravise it only to their further zation that the 'friends' of the protective tariff will revise it only to their further
